

1 OVERTURE 1 from the Northern New England Presbytery (to CCB, OC)
2 “Amend BCO 32-2 to Clarify that a Court May Investigate Whether Charges Should 3 Be Filed”
4

5 Be it resolved that BCO 32-2 be amended by striking the current language and replacing it
6 with the following (deletions indicated by ~~striketrough~~; additions by underlining).
7

8 Existing language:

9 ~~32-2. Process against an offender shall not be commenced unless some person or 10 persons undertake to make out the charge; or unless the court finds it necessary, for 11 the honor of religion, itself to take the step provided for in BCO 31-2.~~ 12

13 Proposed language:

14 32-2. Prior to commencing process against an alleged offender, regardless of how 15 allegations arose, the court shall investigate to the extent necessary to determine:
16 a. if it is a personal or general offense
17 b. if personal, whether Matthew 18 has been followed
18 c. if the nature of the alleged offense rises to a level warranting judicial
19 process
20 d. if the accuser is like any of those described in BCO 31-8
21 e. if there is a strong presumption of guilt
22 f. if it is reasonable to expect the offense can be proven through judicial
23 process
24

25 Rationale
26

27 The current language of BCO 32-2 has sometimes been read to allow an individual to force a
28 court of the Church to institute process by the filing of charges, taking the court’s discretion
29 to investigate and determine if discipline in the restricted and technical sense of judicial 30 process (BCO 27-1.b) is the necessary avenue for achieving the ends of discipline as laid out
31 in BCO 27-3.
32

33 Thus, in Case 2011-15, the SJC declares that “in general BCO 32-2 requires that a court
34 commence process upon the filing of charges.”<sup>1</sup> The concurring opinion to case 2010-04 lays 35 out this two-fold path to judicial process in more detail.

36 There are two (2) basic ways for such concerns to be resolved by a trial.

37 First, a trial may result from a BCO 31-2 investigation, which leads to a finding 38 of a strong presumption of guilt. Upon such a finding, a prosecutor is appointed, an 39 indictment drawn, Parties cited, and a trial is conducted.

40 Second, a trial may result when someone, who believes an offense has occurred
41 and after practicing Matthew 18:15, files "charges" under BCO 32-2.

42 It is at this point that some err in understanding how our Constitution instructs 43 us to proceed. Some, incorrectly, believe that when BCO 32-2 “charges” are made, the

1 Constitution requires (1) a BCO 31-2 investigation and (2) a finding of a strong
2 presumption of guilt, before proceeding to trial. The correct interpretation of the 3 Constitution, as set forth in the Decision, is that when BCO 32-2 "charges" are made
4 out (and Matthew 18:15 has been practiced and BCO 31-8 does not apply), there is
5 NO investigation under BCO 31-2, but rather the Court goes directly to appoint a
6 prosecutor, an indictment is drawn, the Parties are cited, and a trial is conducted.<sup>2</sup>

8 This reading of the current language means that the filing of charges by an individual is both
9 a necessary and a sufficient cause to institute judicial process. Thus, a court that has received
10 charges has a very narrow latitude in not ordering an indictment to be drawn and proceeding
11 to trial (only the provisions of BCO 31-8 according to the decision in Case 2011-15).

13 However, previously one of the issues raised in Case 91-6 was “Does a court have the 14 prerogative of not adjudicating a case once charges have been placed before it?” At that time,
15 the SJC answered, and GA approved (it was the procedure at that time for GA to approve SJC 16 decisions), that “A court has the duty to investigate the allegations to determine if a trial is 17 necessary (BCO 31-2).”<sup>3</sup> Thus, GA concluded that a court should have the obligation to 18 investigate before instituting process. Ramsay agrees:

19 The whole tone of these Rules is evidently this: that judicial prosecution is not to be 20 originated, either by a court or by a voluntary prosecutor, unless the honor of religion
21 requires this step, all other means to this end having been first exhausted; but that this 22 means is, of course, to be resorted to when the honor of religion does require it, the 23 honor of religion to be preserved at every cost. And the honor of religion is 24 synonymous with the holiness of the Church.<sup>4</sup>

26 But by the reading in Hahn, an individual may force a court of the Church to process without 27 the court having the ability to exhaust all other means to maintain the ends of discipline (the 28 glory of God, the purity of his Church, and the keeping and reclaiming of lost sinners, BCO
29 27-3). This removes the discretion of the court, the use of the wisdom God has given to the 30 shepherds he has called to care for that portion of the Church.

31
32 The amendment makes explicit that bringing allegations before a court is a necessary but not 33 a sufficient step for moving into judicial process.<sup>5</sup> It makes explicit that the court always has 34 the authority and the duty to investigate and pursue the ends of discipline through the 35 appropriate means. The proposed language maintains judicial process in its proper and 36 historical place, as the means of last resort when all other means have been exhausted.
